UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

Jason A. Czekalski

v.

Case No. 18-cv-592-PB
Opinion No. 2022 DNH 021

Helen Hanks, Commissioner,
New Hampshire Department of Corrections

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Jason A. Czekalski, a Jewish inmate at the New Hampshire

Department of Corrections ("NHDOC"), sued the NHDOC Commissioner

Helen Hanks after she denied his requests for various religious accommodations. Before me is the Commissioner's motion for summary judgment on his claims that the Commissioner violated

the Establishment Clause when she denied (1) his requests for delivery of food to his cell (so-called cell feeds) to accommodate his daily morning prayers and his observance of the Sabbath, and (2) his request to wear a head covering of his choice.¹ I grant the Commissioner's motion because Czekalski failed to exhaust his administrative remedies with respect to the cell feed claims, and his head covering claim fails on the merits.

¹ Czekalski also alleged that the Commissioner violated his rights under the Religious Land Use and Incarcerated Persons Act ("RLUIPA"). I addressed the RLUIPA claims in a prior order, where I denied the Commissioner's motion for summary judgment regarding cell feeds but granted it as to the head covering claim. See Czekalski v. Hanks, 2020 DNH 212, 2020 WL 7231358, at *22-*24 (D.N.H. 2020).

I. BACKGROUND²

Czekalski has practiced his Jewish faith while incarcerated at the NHDOC. Czekalski prays before breakfast every morning for about forty-five minutes to an hour. He claims that because he needs to pray, he cannot attend breakfast when his unit is called to the chow hall. Instead, he prepares his own breakfast from the food he buys in the commissary. He would prefer to have breakfast delivered to his cell, a process known as a "cell feed."

Czekalski also observes a weekly Sabbath beginning at sundown on Friday and ending at sundown on Saturday. He observes a prohibition on work during that time and also claims that he cannot leave his unit's yard. That restriction means that he cannot walk to the chow hall for dinner on Friday during December and January (because of the early sunsets) and for any meal on Saturdays. In lieu of chow hall meals, he eats food from the commissary, but he would prefer to have cell feeds.

Czekalski also covers his head at all times as a part of his religious practice. Although the prison generally does not allow inmates to wear head coverings indoors, it makes an exception for inmates who wear yarmulkes. Czekalski keeps one or two yarmulkes in his cell, and he wore a yarmulke for court appearances in this case. Still, Czekalski considers a snug knit cap, which inmates are allowed to wear outdoors, to be a better head covering than a yarmulke because it stays on his head. Correctional officers have told him that he cannot wear a knit cap indoors.

The prison had a three-step grievance procedure during the relevant time that began with Inmate Request Slips at Level 1.

The next level, Level 2, is satisfied by making a grievance to the prison warden. Level 3 mandates the filing of a grievance with the Commissioner. The grievance policy required sufficient detail to show the nature of the complaint or request. Matters for grievance included requests for assistance or services, requests for consideration of a matter in which the inmate believed he was improperly or unfairly treated, and requests for reconsideration.

In February 2018, Czekalski filed a grievance in which he requested daily breakfast cell feeds to accommodate his morning prayer schedule. He also mentioned that he might demand additional cell feeds during the Sabbath and then raise the issue in a lawsuit. His request was denied at Level 1 because the prison chaplain was informed by a consulting rabbi that no cell feeds were needed for religious accommodation. Czekalski appealed the denial through the grievance system. The Commissioner responded as follows:

Dear Resident Czekalski,
In review of your request, cell feeds are not necessary to accommodate your religious needs.
Sabbath does not by practice limit your ability to go to the designated meal times while still engaging in the 3 times a day prayer as others who practice your same faith are able to demonstrate [in] our facilities.

Doc. No. 113-1, at *5. Czekalski did not include in the record any further appeals about cell feeds.

With respect to his head covering, Czekalski filed a grievance in November 2017, asking the prison staff to permit him to wear his knit cap as a religious head covering. After he became dissatisfied with the chaplain's responses on the matter, he appealed. Director of Community Corrections Kim McKay responded on behalf of the Commissioner, stating that a "knit cap is not considered a religious head covering." Doc. No. 113-1, at *12. Czekalski has not included any other appeals pertaining to head coverings.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Summary judgment is appropriate "if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). A material fact is one that "'carries with it the potential to affect the outcome of the suit.'" French v.

III. ANALYSIS

The Commissioner moves for summary judgment on Czekalski's Establishment Clause claims. She argues that Czekalski did not exhaust his administrative remedies with respect to those claims and that she is entitled to qualified immunity. Czekalski objects. I address the claims in turn.

A. Cell Feed Claims

Under the Prisoner Litigation Reform Act, a prisoner is barred from bringing claims challenging prison conditions under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 "until such administrative remedies as are available are exhausted." 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a). That requirement provides an affirmative defense that a defendant may raise. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 216 (2007). The defendant bears the burden of showing that administrative remedies were available and that the plaintiff failed to exhaust them. See Casanova v. Duboi, 304 F.3d 75, 77 n.3 (1st Cir. 2002). The prison's grievance procedure provides the boundaries of proper exhaustion. See Jones, 549 U.S. at 218.

A prisoner is required to properly exhaust all available administrative remedies for each claim he brings under § 1983. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90 (2006). This means that the prison must be given the opportunity to address each issue on the merits. See id. I agree with the Commissioner that Czekalski's grievances about his cell feed requests were insufficient to put the prison on notice of his claim that the prison was establishing a state religion or favoring one religion over another.

Czekalski contends that the Commissioner violated the Establishment Clause because she denied his cell feed requests on the ground that other Jewish inmates did not require such accommodations. According to Czekalski, this amounted to favoring a practice of Judaism that was different from his own.

³ To the extent Czekalski argues that the Commissioner waived the exhaustion defense, I already rejected his argument in my prior summary judgment order. See Czekalski, 2020 WL 7231358, at *10-*12. He cites no authority that would give me cause to reexamine my decision.

But nothing in Czekalski's grievance indicated to the Commissioner that his morning prayer and Shabbat practices were an idiosyncratic practice of the Jewish faith. Nor does he point to evidence that the Commissioner was otherwise on notice that his practices were distinct from the practices of other

Jewish inmates who attend chow hall meals during scheduled times. Further, after he received the Commissioner's response,

Czekalski did not follow up with a claim that her general characterization of Jewish inmates' practices amounted to establishing a state religion or preferring one denomination over another. Without more, it cannot be said that Czekalski gave the prison the opportunity to address the merits of his claim that the denial of his cell feed requests violated the Establishment Clause. Accordingly, he has failed to exhaust his administrative remedies for those claims.

B. Head Covering Claim

The prison allows Jewish inmates to wear yarmulkes as a religious accommodation. Czekalski contends that this rule violates the Establishment Clause because any type of head covering satisfies the religious requirement, and he would prefer to wear a knit cap. In other words, he does not allege that a yarmulke amounts to an impermissible accommodation, only that he would prefer more choices when it comes to a head covering. Neither the complaint nor Czekalski's objection to the motion shows that his preference is based on an idiosyncratic practice of his faith. Instead, he cites social reasons to explain why he would prefer to wear a knit cap rather than a yarmulke. That is not enough to show that the prison's rule permitting a yarmulke over a knit cap amounts to establishing one sect of Judaism over another. Because the prison has accommodated Czekalski's religious practice without establishing a state religion or exhibiting denominational preference, his claim is doomed.⁴

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Commissioner's motion for summary judgment (Doc. No. 112) is granted. The sole remaining claims in this case allege that the Commissioner's denials of Czekalski's cell feed requests violated RLUIPA (Claims 4a and 4c). A status conference will be scheduled to discuss how to address those remaining claims.

SO ORDERED.

⁴ I do not reach the Commissioner's argument that Czekalski failed to exhaust his head covering claim because his claim obviously fails on its merits.
